

DANCING – WRITING – DRAWING

Coman Poon & Naishi Wang

"Thinking of April – June 2003"

“In separateness, lies the world’s great suffering.
In unity, lies the world’s true strength.”

from January 2020 the declaration of coronavirus wildly spread out in mainland China and beyond. In the beginning, I think that it is similar to SARS in 2003 but it is a far more complicated newly discovered disaster. It quickly became a pandemic worldwide, challenging the way we socialize and interact with each other. Face masks and other protections became essential, creating ongoing demand on the international market. As workers in the cultural sector, practicing has many challenges; Naishi and Coman propose to come together to digest and forecast what will be the “future/dance” for the performing arts.

(CBC News reported on July 31st here that Canada’s GDP after the shut down of March and April. The article reveals that “the only parts of the economy that shrank again were management, public administration and the arts and entertainment sector.”

[REDACTED], three days in advance of a digital Town Hall organized and hosted by the [REDACTED] Arts Council*, [REDACTED] submitted a question that was judiciously edited before it was offered for public consumption by moderator and former [REDACTED] Board Chair [REDACTED].

We offer the full text here as a starting point for our artful “prognostications”:

Hi [REDACTED],

I am sending you a fuller follow up email [REDACTED] as the dialogue box provided in the webinar registration [REDACTED] had character limits [REDACTED] me to [REDACTED] my thoughts into [REDACTED] sentence.

In this geopolitically, economically [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] volatile and uncertain period, the traditional role and function of the arts (in the globalized and localized sense) [REDACTED] be assumed.

Elsewhere in the global [REDACTED], artists are celebrated and supported as workers. This has its upsides (increased income security, access to health benefits and/or pensions) and downsides ([REDACTED] undervaluing of non-traditional [REDACTED] art forms [REDACTED] leaving out those not working [REDACTED] within [REDACTED]).

The global art system is a child of the global [REDACTED] Euro-American [REDACTED] centric notions of art and culture as consumables [REDACTED] debases the human impulse for expression.

Now that [REDACTED], [REDACTED] points to the fallacy of a [REDACTED] aspiration to repair, ameliorate or manifest [REDACTED] a [REDACTED] return to t[REDACTED] normal [REDACTED]. [REDACTED] normal [REDACTED] is the problem [REDACTED] entrenched in racism, inequality, and politically correct posturing.

We have before us an opportunity to reinvent [REDACTED] innovate, and lead in a new way [REDACTED] that celebrates human expression.

How [REDACTED] we begin to re-imagine this potential future? How [REDACTED] we build a different set of values and conditions for the creation and propagation of arts [REDACTED] that is not driven by municipal, provincial, and national priorities-of-the-day?

I don't know the answers [REDACTED] nor do I expect the panelists to offer [REDACTED]. But I want [REDACTED] to share this [REDACTED] with everyone present because I think the future is all of ours to remake.

The toilet is sweating. Beads of water covering every surface like a pubescent outbreak of acne.

坐便正在出汗。水珠挤出整个表面好像在经历着青春痘的爆发。

There is a small pool of water just below the front right corner of the white toilet tank.

白色马桶的水箱右下方有一各小水潭。

Drip. 滴.Drip. 滴.

The sound is imagined because the leakage from the caulking in the ceiling is slow and almost full of pregnant pauses.

声音是想象出来的，因为天花板的裂缝中产生了慢节奏的冥想。单程的奇想好像孕味的停顿。

Drip. 滴。

I [redacted] into the washroom to look at [redacted] even when I am not needing to use it. It intrigues me. [redacted] I poke at the caulking with a bamboo stick and feels its pliancy between concrete slabs painted white.

我进入到了卫生间去寻找在我不需要方便的时候。这让我产生了兴趣 - 我用竹棒子戳着裂缝，感觉到被刷成白色的混凝土之间的柔软。

[redacted] There is a lot of whiteness in this room. [redacted] e walls are white. [redacted] he bathtub is white, surrounded by white tiles, held together by white caulking. How did it get to be like this?

这里很白。墙是白的；浴缸是白的，围绕着白色的马桶，被白色的裂缝支撑着。这里的颜色是怎么回事呢？

I look up and stare at the spot where I think the water is dripping from. Is it [redacted] leak from [redacted] washroom [redacted] above me? [redacted] someone is passed out and their floor is flooded. Should I go up and knock on their door? I don't know her [redacted] then told she is an older Black lady. I don't want to scare her, especially [redacted] this time when we are [redacted] [redacted] separated from one another "for our own safety." [redacted] I imagin [redacted].

In the aftermath of the furor that catalyzed global responses to systemic Anti-Black Racism, we ask ourselves, what can one's gaze evoke? How is this problematic when the subject of one's avoidance/gaze is also racialized?

Maybe it's something else [REDACTED] that is leaking.

可能就是漏水，没别原因了。

我向上看，一直盯着一个点，想看水是从哪里滴下来的。是不是从我的马桶漏下来的？会不会是某人拿倒在地上然后水流满地都没有意识。我是不是应该去敲门问候一下？我不认识她。听说她是一个黑人。不想去突然拜访而吓到她，特别是现在，这个种族分裂的时刻“为我们”的安全“不过好景象”数倍多了。

別了自由的灵魂，
所有的大海都是你的纪念碑，
我要问你去何方，你指着大海的方向。

Farewell to free souls,
All the sea is your monument,
I want to ask where you are going, you point towards the sea

安靜，
