INTRODUCTION

Curaçao was formerly the administrative capital of the Netherlands Antilles, the final remnant of the Dutch colonial empire in the Caribbean (Sharpe, 2008, para. 8). In 2010, with the official dissolution of the Netherlands Antilles, Curaçao became a self-governing nation within the Kingdom of the Netherlands (Curaçao, 2012).

Curaçao is rocky and arid; the climate and terrain of the island inhibit extensive cultivation, preventing the development of the agricultural plantations that dominated many of the other West Indian islands (Allofs, van Niekerk, Salverda & Dh'aen, 2008). The official languages are Dutch, English and Papiamentu, “a Spanish-based creole with Portuguese, Dutch, and English elements” (Netherlands Antilles, 2008, para. 2).

Beginning in the 17th century, the islands of the Netherlands Antilles were controlled by the Dutch West India Company, the monopoly responsible for governing Dutch colonies in the Americas. The Dutch East India Company held control over Dutch colonies in the Pacific and in Africa (Sharpe, 2008). The slave trade was one of the West India Company’s ventures, and Curaçao served as an important commercial centre and slave depot – a trans-shipment point between West Africa and the slave markets of the New World (Dutch empire, 2008). In the 20th century, after the discovery of oil in Venezuela, oil refineries were opened in Curaçao and the petroleum industry became a major component of the island’s economy (Razak, 2005).

Folk musical traditions of Curaçao include tambu (also known as “the Curaçao blues”) and tumba (Razak, 2005). Art music has long had a presence in Curaçao. Orchestras, concert societies, and art musical instruction have been in place since the early 19th century (Ganseman, 2008). Composed dance music, for localized versions of dances such as waltz, polkas and mazurkas, is particularly popular in Curaçao (Ganseman, 2008). “The most important of these is the Antillean waltz (also known as the Curaçaoan waltz), distinguished from its European relatives chiefly by its differently accented rhythmic patterns” (Bilby, 2013, para. 10).

Wim Stadius Muller, a prominent composer and pianist from Curaçao, elaborated on the musical traditions and unique rhythms of the music of Curaçao and the former Netherlands Antilles.

These islands

have a particular type of music, the Caribbean music which derives from African sources, from Western European sources—that music is fascinating in its rhythm and you can hear it through all the islands. But each one of the islands will have a slightly different version of the same rhythm or maybe the melodic idiom will be slightly different. The interesting thing about all these waltzes is ... that your basic 3/4 rhythm always has a 6/8 implication. You're able to hear six running eighth notes either in a duple or triple meter. Sometimes you hear the duple and the triple combined (Dubal & Status Muller, 2013).

The Palm and Boskaljon families have turned out a large number of musicians and composers and have “dominated the field of composition for several generations” (Ganseman, 2008, p. 433). Jan Gerard Palm, the founder of the musical Palm dynasty, is often called the “father of Curaçao classical music” (“Musical homage”, 2012, para. 2).

The Cultureel Centrum Curaçao (Sentro Kultural Kòrsou) provides private instruction in music, dance, and the literary, dramatic, and visual arts. The centre's music school, the Akademia di Músika Edgar Palm (re-named for the prominent composer in 1999), “offers classes in piano, guitar, keyboard, kuarta and mandolin, recorder (‘blokfluit’), trumpet, saxophone, drum, percussion ... and AMV (Algemeen Muziek Vormend onderwijs) = general music education” (“History”, 2011, paras. 6-7). Former students at the Akademia include composer and guitarist Randal Corsen (“History”, 2011).
