PROFESSIONAL BIO

Yu Hong is an assistant professor in the School of Communication at USC Annenberg. She got her Ph.D. in Communication from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

Her research areas include:

- ICTs and development
- Political economy of global communication
- China's information and communications industry, information labor, and information society theories

“Networking the nation: communication and economic restructuring in China”

Dr. Yu Hong will talk about how communications, across its entire range from telecommunications to broadband and from wireless networks to digital media, are becoming a state-designated growth engine intended to rejuvenate China's political economy out of the stagnation that has afflicted the entire global capitalist system with which China is deeply integrated.
